If anybody was at the U of T pool over the weekend you would have been treated to an incredible show by Laurentian's Nancy Sweetnam. The first night Nancy battled the national breaststroke champion, Guylaine Cloutier, only to get touched out at the wall. Nancy didn't let this get to her however, and destroyed the field in the 400 IM (Individual Medley) by 12 seconds! Nancy's time (4:38.61) was the Canadian, CIAU, and Commonwealth RECORD & Fastest Time in the WORLD this year (6th fastest woman ever!)

Rumours of Alleged Sexual Assaults Cause Concern Among Students

Andy McKillean
Staff Writer

Recent rumours of a number of sexual assault on the Laurentian University campus have some students concerned about the issue of campus security. Whether the cause for concern is justified or not is unclear as only one sexual assault, happening close to the campus, has been reported to police this year.

The alleged assault took place on South Bay Road in December of 1992. Sergeant McCauley of Sudbury Regional Police said in an interview Tuesday, that the assault was reported in January and is still under investigation. McCauley said that it is a reported sexual assault and there are no suspects at this time. McCauley said that the victim was a student of the University. Upon being asked how many assailants were involved, McCauley replied, 'more than one'. He also added that there have been no other reported incidents of sexual assault on the Laurentian University campus this academic year.

Reports of this assault and other assaults rumored to have taken place on campus, have many Laurentian students concerned about security and the lack of information provided to students by administration. Terry Thurlow,

V.P. of Services for the SGA questioned 'Why, if this happened in December, did weeks and months go by with no word?' In an interview, Thurlow went on to say, 'the rumor mill is just flying.'

Ted Clarke, President of the SGA, recognized that because of the lack of information, some groups in the University suggest that the University administration is trying to keep information regarding alleged sexual assaults on campus under wraps. 'The student body hear rumours, they don't hear anything is being covered up.' Clarke suggested that students have the perception is covering something up.

However, Norma MacRae-Ward, Laurentian University's Harassment Officer, suggests that the university is taking a number of steps to ensure that the University community knows what is going on. Among these being posters on campus and an information session to be held at the University in the near future. MacRae-Ward argues that the University is not covering anything up. 'I'd like students to understand, administration says report it.' she says the University cannot take action if incidents are not reported to police. The University can't act on rumors. MacRae-Ward suggests that unless incidents of sexual assault are reported, administration can do nothing.

Janet Sallen, Assistant Director of Communications at Laurentian, recognized the problem caused by not reporting sexual assault and the ensuing rumors. People who have not reported them have done a disservice to the whole community.

For Laurentian's part, it is also unclear how well informed the University is kept. Sergeant McCauley stated, 'It may seem that you're not getting the kind of information you think you should.' He went on to say that in the end, this may turn out to be necessary.

DOUBLE VOTES IMPLICATE ACCLAIMED SGA PRESIDENT

Chris José Barnes
News Editor

Tuesday March 5th, marked the end of speculation and rumors regarding the SGA elections. In what turned out to be a the longest marathon session of the SGA board, Mark Green, Chief Returning Officer, reported the results of the SGA general election

In the first ballot, Tanya Moore defeated Dino Bozzo by a clear margin of 944 votes to 356 votes. For the VP External election, the results gave Heather Bishop 646 votes compared to Ian Munro's 649 votes. Because the results were within 5% of the electorate Heather Bishop requested a recount. During the recount it was discovered that the results were correct.

Later in examining the voter registration lists it was discovered that three people had voted twice. The people who voted twice were Simon Chapelle, Charlie Finks, and Kara McCalister.

Simon Chapelle, the acclaimed SGA president, in a personal interview with Lambda, admitted to voting twice. His reason for voting twice was surrounded with controversy.

Photograph by Sean Clark

On March 8th Simon claimed his reason was to show the indiscrepancies in the electoral system. Later, he claimed it was due to his suspicions that he had spoiled his ballot. Finally Simon stated that the reason for voting twice was because 'he was able to.' It was revealed that Simon's second vote was cast at the Science Cafeteria polling station. In a sworn affidavit by one of the two pole clerks at the station, it was stated that Simon Chapelle came to the registration booth, marked his ballot, then placed it in the ballot box. This was before his name could be crossed of the voter registration list.

Due to the fact that there are no provisions in the constitution that address such a situation Mark Green approached Rand

Dyck, a Political Science professor, here at Laurentian, for advice on what action should be taken. He also contacted Ellen

Cutbacks Will Prevent Students From Graduating

by James Armstrong
staff writer

Laurentian students will no longer be able to graduate in Geology as of next September if the Administrative Budget Committee has their way.

According to James McDonald, president of the Laurentian Geology Club, thirty five percent of the operating budget of the Department of Geology could be cut if current proposals become reality. At present the combined operational and staff salary budget of the department amount to approximately $1,125, 000. Of this, all but $25,000 is untouchable as it is designated for professors salaries. The 3.5% decrease in budget in fact amounts to 35% because the decreases are to cut wholly out of the operating budget.

Dr. Anthony E. Beswick, the Chair of the Geology Department, said 'if the Budget Committee says that's how its going, that's when the disaster starts.' There are six full-time professors scheduled to work next year. The reduction in funds will prevent the dept. from hiring staff to cover the overload courses, even at the minimum cost of only $3200-3400 a year.

A proposal was sent from the Budget Committee in October, to the Geology Council, headed by the Dean of Sciences and Dr. Beswick to ask them how they could accommodate either a 3.5% increase or decrease in the budget.

After discussions within the Geology council a list of courses that could be cut was sent to the Administrative Committee in December. A changed list was returned to the Geology Finances Committee last week.

Since then, students have been scrambling to fill in petition forms in protest of any cutbacks.

First year introductory courses in Geology will be affected and several graduate courses will be cut. There could be a total of 40% undergraduate courses scrapped. The number of courses available will not allow for a concentration in this subject area. Third year students, this year, will not be able to graduate in their chosen field. The feeling among third year students is that they have been left with no other choice but to leave Laurentian altogether. As well, next year's curriculum will not be decided on schedule.

99¢ A Shooter, What a Bargain!!

Too bad this bargain turned into a night of hell for one irresponsible drinker and her friends.

On Saturday February 27th, a friend of ours was attracted to this great deal at the campus pub and decided to take advantage of this cheap drunk. It's important to note that there was approximately 30 participants at this event. A very small amount of people to monitor and control.

Our friend was served anywhere from 20 to 30 shooters in the space of two hours. This is a ridiculous amount of alcohol for the body to consume in such a short period of time. We realize that the pub's "qualified" staff cannot always supervise everyone, but they should recognize the signs of an impaired person. We are qualified bartenders for another campus bar and we have completed the Server Intervention Program prepared by the addiction research Foundation. This program is mandatory for all campus bar staff. In this course, the liability of a server was strongly stressed. Did they not pay attention during the seminar on alcohol consumption given by Rick Miller on September 16th?

We were shocked to hear that our friend had to be carried home from the pub. She lost all motor control and could hardly speak. Her body was in complete shock.

Luckily there were people like ourselves that responded quickly and drove her to the hospital where she was treated for alcohol poisoning.

It is a thing that nothing happened to her between the pub and home. The pub is very lucky because they are the bartender would be held liable. We realize that our friend was completely irresponsible in drinking so much, but she should have been cut off far before reaching the point of no control. We are disgusted that this even happened and hope it will never happen again.

Be a responsible drinker and a responsible server!

To Whom It May Concern

I am very pleased to see that professionalism has made its way to the Lambda editorials. In picking up Thursday March 4th (Vol 31 Num. 22) edition I was not surprised to see information and/a comments on the Prime Ministers resignation. I will admit to having some reservations and fear of reading a bias and pessimistic view of our leader for the past nine years. Yet José placed both the good and bad aspects of Mulroney's terms in office. I thank José for this unbiased view and actually ending the article on an optimistic Tory note.

Thank you very much

REPORT IT!!!

Tired of Rumours? Aren't we all! If you witness an incident on campus that concerns you, call Security either by using the emergency phones or by calling 673-2661 after hours, evenings and weekends or 673-6562 during the day. This allows the University to investigate what has happened so that steps may be taken both to prevent the incident from reoccurring and to alert others to possible danger. When you see an orange and white poster on campus, READ IT!! This is the University's way of keeping you informed about incidents. KEEP SAFETY IN MIND AT ALL TIMES!!!

In Defense of International Women's Week

To Angelo, Marty and Derek:

Regarding your "Open Letter to All Feminists (And Other Male Bashers)," (Lambda, March 4) your analyses of feminism, Women's Studies, violence, and the situation of clerical workers at Inco are weak at best. It is surprising that in a university environment, the collective efforts of three minds could not come up with more accurate insight into issues you have connected with feminist efforts.

In response to your challenges to "name 10 influential and/or famous women without looking at a history book," I can easily identify Mary Wollstonecraft, Adrienne Rich, Joan of Arc, Ida B. Wells, Margaret Atwood, Mother Theresa, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Sojourner Truth, Margaret Sanger and Virginia Woolf as hard-working individuals who have made extraordinary contributions to human life. Many more women can be acknowledged, not just as "famous and/or influential," but as those who both improved the human condition and helped forward intellectual thought. By the way, one need not look only to history books for discussions of or works by notable women — their influences can also be seen in literature, social and political theory, music, science, medicine, and sports. In short, women have contributed to every area of activism and knowledge.

The unfortunate situation, however, is that their efforts have largely been ignored by male-dominated streams of academic thought. Women's Studies and feminist-oriented courses in other disciplines are often the only source for acknowledgment of the contributions made by women. Your suggestion of a "Men's Studies" curriculum ignores the fact that most courses are centered around male experiences and theories and issues put forth by men, and as such constitute studies of men and androcentric thought. Women such as those I have listed have made extraordinary contributions and deserve to be studied in a similar manner as Karl Marx, Marshall McLuhan, Stephen Hawking and any other male figure in social and scientific history.

Men, your analysis of murder rates fails to recognize several important issues. First of all, the word violence refers to more than just homicide; physical and sexual assault are also acts of brutality. Current statistics put forth by Canadian governments indicate that one in 10 women is abused by her partner, and 25 per cent of women will be sexually assaulted at least once in their lifetime. Murders of men are usually crime-related, while 60 per cent of all murdered women are killed by their partners. Violence against women occurs because its victims and survivors are assumed by offenders to be physically and mentally inferior, and therefore easy targets and scapegoats. Marc Lepine killed 14 women in Montreal in 1989 for no reason other than the fact that they were female. Men who commit violence against women do so by choice. In recognition of these facts, is it so much to ask that one week out of every 52 be put aside to acknowledge the seriousness and pervasiveness of these crimes and to deter others from making this choice?

The answer to your original question, "Is it something men said ... [or] did?" is therefore a resounding yes. When social and religious philosophers, political decision-makers, and others in power chose to exclude or excrete women (and, for that matter, other social groups such as persons of colour and gays and lesbians), and when considerable numbers of men decide to rape and batter, we need to recognize the struggles of the oppressed and their attempts to achieve equality. International Women's Week, Take Back the Night Marches, and Women's Studies (and, in similar ways, Black History Month and 500 Years of Resistance) should, therefore, not be seen as things (white) men do not have, but as a symbolic acknowledgment of the accomplishments and improvements still needed for those who suffer at the hands of others.

Unknowingly, your inability to name 10 "influential and/or famous women" and your dismissals of violence against women and the plight of working females are proof positive of the need for feminism, Women's Studies, and issue-awareness campaigns. Your "confuse" states and the false assumptions and stereotypes evident in your top 10 list could not have provided clearer indications of how much work still needs to be done for the sake of gender equality and understanding of social diversity.

Sincerely,
Susan Vanstone.

An Open Letter to the Prisoner of Reality and Lambda

For the past two years, I have been an avid reader of Lambda, and in those two years, nothing has offended me more (cher Pierre came pretty close) than something that was printed in last week's publication.

Last week, a Top Ten List of Infamous Quotes was compiled and one of those read "Look at me. I'm Jesus, I can walk on water - Benji, after a Pink Floyd concert."

Now if memory serves me correct, this quote is referring to the unfortunate accident where a 14 year old boy tried LSD for his first time, and ended up drowning in Lake Ontario.

This is where I find myself upset at you and Lambda. It is one thing to poke fun at the misfortune of one, as long as that misfortune is small and not very meaningful. However, when someone dies accidentally, a line is drawn that should not be crossed. You crossed that line, and for the sake of humour, made fun of something as serious as death.

I take great offense to this humour. I think it is uncalled for, immoral and unethical. It was definitely poor judgment on your part and Lambda's to print such garbage.

If your print shit like that in the future, then I will definitely stop reading your articles and maybe even Lambda itself.

Oh, and one more thing Mr. Prisoner of Reality, your name is a definite rip-off of Prisoners of Gravity, a great show for all science fiction fans. Don't embarrass Commander Rick by printing such tripe in the future.

A Prisoner of Gravity,
Chris Young

Curb from the City Clerks Office. The general consensus was that the Ontario Elections Act, Municipal Elections Act, and the Canada Elections Act, should be followed.

Mark Green then presented his proposals to the SGA board. These proposals included a statement declaring that the VP of External's election did not have conclusive results, and that a second ballot would be held. He presented the balloting schedule which was later passed by the board. Finally, Mark Green recommended that Simon Chapelle be disqualified for the position of SGA president.

These proposals went to a vote after a lengthy question period. The results of the board were to hold new elections for VP External. In an attempt to compensate the two candidates' campaign costs, the SGA decided to provide both candidates with $350 worth of photocopying expenses. This does not include the $2200 cost for running the original election, and the further cost of holding the second ballot elections.

Ian Munro had voiced concerns that this election would be tainted by rumors. One of the many rumors circulating at the time was that Heater Bishop had told people that Ian was one of the three people who had voted twice. Heather denied this rumor openly and said "I made no comments to any one regarding the past election or the possibility of an up coming election." Ted Clarke, this year's acting president, said that "unfortunately Ian is a victim of the 'rumor-mill'".

In the second and more controversial recommendation of the CRO's report the vote by the board was tied. The CRO's report recommended that Simon Chapelle be disqualified for the position of President elect. The vote was to be decided by the chair, Mike Mayo, the chair declined to vote and the motion was killed. This simply states that Simon Chapelle is still the acclaimed SGA president until further notification.

After the vote Simon was quoted as saying "If you can come up to me and prove that you (anyone on the board) voted NO. Drinks are on me!"

Photograph by Sean Clark

The board later voted to take the situation to the student population. This forum is to be set in the form of a referendum (as seen on page 10). The referendum will be held the same day as the VP External elections, and campaigning will be start on Monday 15th.

Ted Clarke was truly upset at the outcome of the board's decision, in a interview after the board meeting Clarke said, "I think that the SGA board is totally irresponsible". The reason behind this statement was based on the fact that when the vote on the issue of Simon's disqualification as President acclaimed, four board members had left the meeting.

In light of these happenings, it was brought forward that Simon Chapelle, as the current VP External, and this year's chairman of the Constitutional Reform Committee, should have known that it was stated within the constitution that "No one may vote more than once on a referendum question or in an SGA election." Simon also came under fire by members of the board for abusing his authority.

The discussion was further pushed on by Piotr Przychodzki, Editor-in-Chief of Lambda. His point was that the electoral process under which Simon Chapelle was acclaimed to the Presidential position was faulty. He pointed out that numerous student organizations have a 'yes' and a 'no' option when there is a single candidate running for any position, and that this should be adopted by the SGA to give students an option.

A general consensus felt by people questioned is that the implications of the three people who voted twice will be paid for by the students, both financially and in terms of credibility. In addition the actions of Simon Chapelle are undeniable wrong. He did however demonstrate that numerous members of the SGA board, including himself, are corrupt. As the present VP of Finances Steve Smith, summarized during the SGA meeting Simon Chapelle has seriously compromised the integrity of the SGA. Smith's credibility as a viable student representative has already been challenged by administration members. Students deserve and must have, responsible, credible, and accountable representatives. Unfortunately the current system is in a serious crisis, both as an organization and as a collective of student politicians.

Do You Fear What I Fear?

by Shannon Hickey

In response to the letter most derogatorily directed at 'feminists' and 'other male bashers', I've got a few things I'd like to get off my chest, no pun intended.

First I was shocked and undoubtedly offended at the entire tone of the letter. The authors were apparently trying to make women feel guilty for standing up for their rights to equity, and that my friends, is discrimination in its truest form. I simply cannot understand how you fail to recognize the seriousness of the situation in which women are increasingly finding themselves - abused, harassed, and discriminated against. Granted not every man in the world is guilty of such abuse, but there are still men who maintain archaic attitudes. To those of you who can truly accept women and their changing societal roles, I salute you. My heartfelt thanks. The rest of you - read on.

Secondly, your example regarding women's studies course proves that the message 'feminists' are so desperately attempting to convey has been lost. The fact that you 'challenge anyone to name 10 influential and or famous women' says it all. We've all been taught

'men's studies' since kindergarten, and it's time for education to present the other side of the story. By the way, my friends came up with 10 easily.

What this university needs is course in male-female relations. It's sad to think that by this age we still don't know how to treat each other as equals, but maybe if men could understand where we're coming from they would change some of their attitudes. All women seek equality - we don't want to dominate men and we certainly don't hate you, but we want our places in society to be equal. Now women and men are different: there are undeniable physical characteristics that cannot be ignored or even rectified, but we can achieve an equality of opportunity if men can make the effort to accept women as contributing members of society. It's all we ask.

Finally, at this stage, equality is not our sole concern. Violence against women in this country and yes, at Laurentian, is reaching epidemic proportions. I agree that the murder rate for men is twice that of women, but you've failed to mention that the overwhelming majority of those crimes are committed by men, as are crimes against women. Perhaps we should have two weeks dedicated to violence against men, but instead would it not be more useful to attempt to prevent all violence before it happens?

Which brings me to my list: Top Ten Brutally Real Statistics

Relating to Violence Against Women:

10. In 1990, 27 822 sexual assaults were reported in Canada more than 90% of the victims were women.
 9. An estimated 50% of sexual assaults are never reported.
 8. Mark Lepine ruthlessly gunned down 14 engineering students at Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal because they were women.
 7. 1 in 4 Canadian women will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime.
 6. 3 sexual assaults are reported in Canada each hour.
 5. The number of Canadian women killed by lovers/husbands is two per week.
 4. Kristen French, Leslie Mahaffy, Nina DeVilliers.
 3. 56% of women in Canada are afraid to walk alone at night.
 2. 81% of university and college women report having been abused either physically, mentally, or sexually.
 1. 75% of college and university men admit to having been abusive. That's three out of four Laurentian males. (Macleans, Feb. 1993, Nov. 1991)
- There you have it. Cold, hard indisputable facts. In conclusion, I would like to say that in an age where women can't even walk to the library alone and where the number of rapes, sexual assaults and incidents of sexual harassment are rapidly increasing, it is time for men to start evaluating their practices. Yes it's something men said, yes it's something men did, but it's something men can change.

Pierre Roberge, Dean, Faculty of Professional Schools
Geoff Tesson, Dean, Faculty of Social Sciences

The purpose of this letter is two-fold.

The first is to let you know, well in advance, that all full-time students who intend to return to Laurentian next September will be required to Advance Register during the period mid-July to mid-August.

Secondly, in order to ensure that your Advance Registration goes as smoothly as possible, we have designated the period March 23 to April 2 for Advance Registration Counselling.

You should make an appointment now to meet with your Academic Advisor during the counselling period. Your Advisor will assist you in selecting courses for next year, resolving problems you might have in meeting degree requirements, and suggesting options which are open to you.

This is not a formal commitment to register for next year, but a counselling session. It is in your best interests to take advantage of this opportunity -- don't miss it!

Good luck with your studies.

Rape: Let's Be Aware

As Peer Assistants, committed to humanizing the campus environment, we are very concerned about the rumours of a rape which occurred recently close to the campus. The rumours are everywhere, and we believe they should be either confirmed or denied; the matter should at least be clarified.

According to stories, a young woman was attacked by a group of men on South Bay Road. It is not clear when this took place. The incident has been reported in the Sudbury press, both on radio and in the papers. The head of Communications at Laurentian responded to the article in the Star, and the Assistant Chief of Police is quoted as saying that the incident was not reported, because "he didn't see it as any threat to anybody at the university." The university has made no announcement to students.

Sexual harassment, assault and rape on campuses have been in the national press recently, as a result of a study reporting that 80% of women students have suffered some sort of sexual intimidation. Yet Laurentian has not reported a very serious incident to its students giving them the opportunity to take appropriate precautions. Can students not decide if an incident is "a threat"? Can they not decide what sort of response is appropriate?

We believe that Laurentian's administration should report incidents like this, because first, students can decide for themselves about how to react and second, rumours are far more dangerous than the reality. We believe that a policy of openness, which does not identify or accuse anybody, will also encourage people - who are involved in or observed incidents - to come forward and report.

Let's work together to make Laurentian a safer community.

Send In The Clowns

Wednesday, March 3 was 'Clowning on Campus.' Sponsored by the Campus Ministry group, 12 participants donned the motley, ie., dressed as clowns, and others sported face decorations.

The clown was not the invention of any one nation or culture, and whether playing the role of court jester, fool (eg. in King Lear), or mimier, has always held an important place in society.

Clowning is successful when it frees and encourages us to look at ourselves and our world and to see the humor in the incongruities of human life. We have a propensity to take everything much too seriously.

The clown, being disarmingly unassuming, seeks to release us from the intensity with which most of us pursue life, and to lead us into laughter and some brighter space, however briefly. Laughter may take us outside ourselves for a moment and give us the opportunity to regain our perspective and focus.

We live in a society which badly needs the clown's presence and the gift of laughter. Laughter is a manifestation of love and caring. When we get the lonlies, we wonder: "Who knows or cares if I laugh or cry?" Someone does.

The Campus Ministry group is encouraged by the positive response to Clowning Day, and hopes to make it an annual event. The experience was summarized by a group member in the following words: God's foolishness is wiser than human wisdom. (1 Corinthians. 1:25).

This is an excellent chance to learn certain defensive techniques which may help make you feel more secure. Details will be posted shortly. Students Need Safe Return on Vacation Savings Investment

Anne Starret, CA

(MC) - College students should choose secure investments rather than the risky stock market for their summer earnings. The prudent course is to make sure the money is there when you need it. While investing axiom advises, "A big risk is the key to a big gain," another maxim preaches restraint: "Never risk what you can't afford to lose." The second is smarter.

Wannabe tycoons on campuses like to boast about the killing they made on the market. Ignored in the impressive tales are their more frequent wipeouts.

Some students seem to be prone to quick-hit investments of the crash-and-burn variety. In contrast, some students see investing their earnings as more chore than challenge, and choose caution.

In seeking a parking place for summer earnings that you'll need before the end of the school year, there are two overriding considerations: safety and the amount of interest. That translates into flexibility. You want to put your money where it will receive the highest reward but can be cashed in quickly.

Mutual funds are problematic. The value of your equity investment gyrates with the stock market. It calls for good timing in getting out or you may wind up with less than you put in. Besides, there might be a front-end 'load' or commission.

Money markets funds, on the other hand, provide a decent return in these days of dipseydoodling interest rates and can be cashed in within two days. Canadian Savings Bonds are solid cashable three months after purchase but better suited to long-term investment.

Guaranteed Investment Certificates (GICs) from banks or trust companies usually provide a return a shade higher than government bonds but are locked in for a specific period. The trick, then, is to take your summer savings and stagger the placement of GICs. If you have $5000 you might put $2500 into a 30-day GIC, the other half into a 60-day GIC, and keep on rotating them so that some cash is available any month.

Before you decide who should get your money, shop around for the best interest rate. An extra half per cent on $5000 over a year buys a good text book or a dinner for two after exams.

Canada : Institutionalizing Racism

by Michael Eshkibok
Freelance Ojibway Writer

Let's not kid ourselves, racism is alive and well in Canada. In fact, racism is institutionalized. I can remember being in the first grade where Indians were described as savages that scalped white people. Can you guess what that does to the ones it is aimed at? Well, what happens is they become targets of racial discrimination, hate, and fear. Fights in school yards become based on racial origin, and the colour of your skin. It carries into adulthood. Sometimes people are emotionally scarred for life. Is it any wonder Native people don't feel welcome in Canadian society, in the land of the free but not the home of the brave.

The Oka crisis was racism brought to a head, because it reinforced to some how they really feel about Indians. Native life has not prospered on equal terms since the arrival of the Europeans. Native people still live in Third World conditions.

Proof of racism exists through unfair legislation and today's on-going disputes including the Oka crisis of 1990. The Oka standoff alone cost the province of Quebec over $112 million. This does not include the social costs of people pelting a convoy of cars with rocks and bricks as police looked on without intervening. Native people risked personal arrest and injury to protect their rights.

In fighting back they were labeled animals. Although 17 white people were charged with injuring 12 Kahnawake residents, so far only one of the 17 has been given a suspended sentence. As Joe Norton, Chief of the Kahnawake Mohawk reserve says, it underlines society's double standard.

Another issue that raised the price of racism is the James Bay hydro-electric projects. Hydro-Quebec lost a 17 billion dollar contract to the U.S. partially due to refusing to recognize Native and environmental impacts on their huge construction projects. The costs to both sides has been enormous, including negative world attention on a country that says it stands for peace.

The British North American Act (the Constitution Act of 1867) gave the federal government responsibility for Indians and lands reserved for them. Indians must not only live under the same laws as other Canadians, but the Indian Act of 1867 as well. It has changed very little since its initiation. Some of the former legislation included; not being able to vote until 1960, Indian women who married non-Indians lost their status and consequently were removed from band membership but this is not applicable to men. It also meant losing status for getting a university degree, leaving the reserve without a pass, banning Native ceremonies, prohibited from raising funds for land claims from 1927-51, prohibited from consuming alcohol in public placed like hotels. Sounds like apartheid to me. No small surprise the Human Rights Commission was quite concerned.

What does racism do? It dehumanizes the human spirit; it bites deeply into the psyche. Racism marks all its victims with deep anger, fear, hurt, confusion and guilt. Remember when you call somebody "nigger", "paki", "Indian", or whatever you hurt them.

Acceptance is the answer. It is not enough to refuse to judge, people need to actively understand. Attitudes are deeply imbedded. We all need to quit denying we have such attitudes. We must accept them as part of us, work at identifying them, be aware of how we express them and then try to change them. We're all involved.

Cutbacks Will Prevent Students From Graduating

by James Armstrong

Anyone who has driven onto campus immediately knows the importance of the sciences at Laurentian University by the recent construction of the Ontario Geological Survey headquarters (OGS). This $60 million facility was built under the encouragement of the five year plan implemented last year. The OGS carries with it the potential for, among other things, future graduate and Ph.D. programs in Chemistry, Biology, Physics and Geology which Laurentian does not offer today. The potential will be cut off at its source if only external universities will be able to make use of it after the science programs for undergraduate students are drastically slashed.

One of the principle motions of the five year strategic plan was to allow and encourage the current, unprecedented popularity of the Earth Science program over the past two years. Currently, degrees can be achieved in Earth Science as a BA or a B.Sc., or a combination thereof (as the Laurentian calendar seem to indicate in various, redundant chapters dedicated to the program). The cutbacks contradict the administration's own planning strategies. The future of Laurentian sciences is very uncertain.

Next week read about the equivalent cuts in Math/Computer Science, Engineering, Chemistry, Biology, Physics and throughout the University.

Afrique-Canada; un pont: Les étudiants africains de la Laurentienne.

Joël Bombo-Konghonzaud

Collaborateur

Le mois de février consacré à l'histoire du peuple noir s'est terminé par la semaine africaine qui s'est étendue du 22 au 29 février.

À cette occasion, le village international de Sudbury et l'Association des étudiants africains ont, pendant deux jours, dressé des stands dans le corridor, nommé "bowling alley". On y voyait entre autre des produits artisanaux africains ainsi que des brochures portant sur l'Afrique, expliquant surtout sa situation économique ainsi que les raisons profondes qui y ont conduit. Je ne rentrerai pas dans les détails car le sujet possède plusieurs facettes.

Pour parler de la soirée du samedi que l'on a baptisé "nuit culturelle", elle a commencé avec la présentation du Dr Raoul Étongué dont le sujet est "le développement et la conscience africaine" précédé du souper composé de mets africains. Ce souper qui nécessite beaucoup d'efforts de la part des étudiantes africaines a été un véritable régal pour les connaisseurs.

La présentation du Dr Raoul Étongué-Mayer a également permis à nos invitées et invités canadiens de voir qu'une nouvelle génération d'Africains avec une pensée originale à propos du développement du continent noir. Je ne rentrerai pas dans les détails car le sujet mérite un article entier vu son importance et sa profondeur. Une chose est sûre et certaine: l'Afrique doit trouver elle-même sa formule de développement et non "emprunter" telle ou telle recette qui a marché ailleurs. Nous y reviendrons.

Pour terminer, la partie dansante de la soirée culturelle a été très remarquable. Le seul regret est que les canadiennes et canadiens ne connaissent pas assez notre musique pour l'apprécier pleinement. Peut-être qu'avec le temps et l'habitude...

Enfin un grand merci à tous ceux qui ont participé à la réussite de cette soirée par leur présence, les étudiants et professeurs africains, les membres de l'administration de l'Université Laurentienne et surtout à Dominique Millette qui a assuré la traduction en anglais.

Sur la plage, à la fin d'une belle journée.

On se trouvait ensemble, main dans la main.

Oh! Comme je me sentais heureuse, aimée

Quand soudain, il me dit qu'il partait le lendemain.

L'angoisse et la tristesse alourdissaient mon coeur,

En entendant cette mauvaise nouvelle. C'était sa mère qui aurait le bonheur

Car en France, elle aura son propre chauffeur.

Alors, nous continuions à marcher

dans ce sable trempé,

Trempe comme les larmes qui coulaient de mes yeux.

Il m'embrassa, me donna un baiser sur la tempe

Et puis, avec un regard désolé, me dit "Adieu!"

Cette amitié profonde qui avait bien commencé

A duré que quelques années.

Mais si je le revois encore, mon bien-aimé,

Jamais...jamais, je le lâcherai!

Le courrier du Pervers

Au cher pervers,

J'ai pris des médicaments et j'ai eu une érection de 5 heures. Cela me faisait mal après seulement 1 heure, mais je n'ai pas eu le courage de me déplacer car j'étais dans un endroit public. Qu'aurais-je pu faire?

Le Poteau

Cher Poteau,

Je vous demande quels sont ces médicaments mystérieux. Je suis capable de comprendre votre gêne dans un endroit public. Mais parfois il est plus important qu'on prenne soin de sa santé avant la morale publique. La meilleure chose à ces moments là est de se trouver un endroit privé et de donner un petit coup de main à votre santé.

Le pervers

Au secours,

Ma femme et moi avons fait des expériences inoubliables dans la chambre de bain d'un avion en vol pour la Floride. Mais, en terminant, l'hôtesse nous a surpris! Nous sommes interdits de reprendre le vol du retour. Qu'allons-nous faire?

Le Pilote

Cher pilote,

Achetez votre propre avion. Mais en ce cas là gardez la tête limpide sinon il y aura un autre avion qui connaîtra une fin fatale. Si vous ne voulez pas prendre ce risque changez de compagnie d'avion.

Le pervers

Cher Pervers,

Je suis en amour avec ma patronne! Mais, elle ne veut rien savoir de moi, depuis notre mésaventure. Je l'aime tellement, et je ne veux pas qu'elle s'éloigne de moi.

Je suis désespéré,
L'humble travailleur

Humble travailleur,

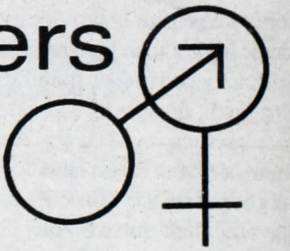

Quelle serait cette mésaventure? Peut-être qu'elle ne voulait déjà rien savoir de vous dès le début! Peut-être qu'elle n'en vaut pas la peine! Meilleure solution: devenez vous-même un patron.

Le pervers

Cher pervers,

Je suis dislexique et l'homo-érotisme est quelque chose qui m'attire. Mais comment est-ce que je suis supposé de lire et m'exciter quand les magazines de cul, d'après ma perception, paraissent comme des hiéroglyphes.

La main chaude

Cher main chaude,

Votre sort m'a très attristé. Je dois admettre que c'est dommage de ne pas pouvoir lire les petites histoires cochonnes. Mais ne vous en faites pas, il devrait sûrement être facile pour toi de te trouver quelqu'un qui va te faire la lecture. Et d'ailleurs, entre nous, ces magazines ne sont, la plupart, pas achetés pour la lecture mais pour les photos. Ne pensez-vous pas aussi que même si vous voyez les photos d'un différent angle cela ne fait pas de différence car le cul est bon dans n'importe quelle position.

Les nationalismes se réveillent

Qui veut la peau de l'Europe?

L'Europe a peur. Elle découvre des dangers insoupçonnés. à l'intérieur de ses murs, et elle ne peut rien faire. Des magazines comme l'Express, L'Événement, Der Spiegel ou El Mundo titrent: "L'Europe au bord de l'abîme", "La Yougoslavie, ce n'est qu'un début...", "Tchèque et Slovaque... et guerre?", "Kosovo, une bombe!". Avec cela, on fournit une carte géographique des risques de conflits, le tout codé selon une nouvelle échelle Richter... enfin, des risques de guerre, mais pour capter le public, il faut faire comme si c'était imminent.

René Saint-Louis

Bucarest, Roumanie

Pris du journal Montréal Campus vol.13, no 9 du 3 février 1993

Si tous les journalistes européens devaient se transformer en Nostradamus, l'avenir serait sombre. Une petite phrase en apéritif: "Le jour où les Albanais du Kosovo se révolteront, l'Albanie entrera en guerre contre la Serbie. Les Albanais de Macédoine viendraient donc au secours de leurs frères", les Grecs interviendront en faveur des Hellènes de Macédoine, ce qui provoquera la réaction des Bulgares et des Turcs qui entreront eux aussi en guerre." Certains magazines vont même jusqu'à coder les risques de conflits selon une échelle exprimée en nombre de morts.

Pire encore, pour parler d'un risque de conflit entre l'Ukraine et la Russie, on écrit: "Bien que ce conflit soit peu probable, tous les espoirs sont permis!"

Des fantômes vivaces

Sous ces articles et reportages à saveur d'holocauste, l'agitation est réelle. De quoi a-t-on peur? Bien que ce ne soit jamais mentionné directement, l'Europe est actuellement déchirée par la possibilité d'une intervention militaire dans l'ex-Yougoslavie. Tous les esprits sont agités par l'éventualité d'une opération militaire d'envergure à leur porte. La grande peur des Européens est de voir le conflit s'étendre. Tant et aussi longtemps qu'aucun autre pays n'est impliqué, le conflit reste local et ne peut s'étendre par le dangereux jeu des alliances.

Seul le nom de Sarajevo suffit à donner le frisson aux Européens. C'est là que débuta la Première Guerre mondiale. Presque 80 ans plus tard, la menace vient de la même ville.

On a misé pendant plusieurs mois sur la diplomatie pour régler le conflit. Cela a partiellement fonctionné avec la Croatie. En Bosnie-Herzégovine, le mélange ethnique est plus complexe et les esprits plus échauffés. Il ne faut plus compter sur la raison pour régler le conflit. Les Serbes en ont fait la preuve en janvier dernier lorsqu'ils ont réélu Slobodan Milosevic à la tête du pays. Même les étudiants de Belgrade qui manifestaient contre la guerre ont cessé de se faire entendre. Ils sont maintenant convaincus du bien-fondé de leur cause nationale et c'est avec sérieux qu'ils revendiquent la "grande Serbie".

Cette dernière revendication se fait surtout au nom de l'Histoire. On affirme vouloir se venger du régime pro-nazi des Ostachis dirigés par les Croates contre les Serbes pendant la Deuxième Guerre mondiale. Et on en veut aux musulmans à cause de l'Empire ottoman du siècle dernier. La vengeance devient actuelle et, élevée au rang national, elle devient tré en faveur d'un règlement négocié ajoutant d'ailleurs qu'il était le seul à pouvoir apporter la paix...

Il s'agit d'un premier signe de bonne volonté de la part de Belgrade, ce qui laisse espérer qu'une paix négociée est toujours possible. Ce sont surtout les chefs serbes de Bosnie, comme Radovan Karadzic, qui ont fait échouer l'entente, bien que celle-ci leur était largement favorable.

S'il est probable que les dirigeants européens attendent encore quelque temps avant d'intervenir militairement, il est à souhaiter qu'ils ne lèvent pas l'embargo, pour autoriser la vente d'armes aux Bosniaques. Cela risquerait d'accentuer la répression des populations civiles et rendrait possible le support direct par d'autres pays de chaque ethnité, ce qui étendrait véritablement le conflit.

Il ne fait pas de doute qu'une résolution unanime du Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU serait suffisante pour intervenir militairement en du nationalisme fanatique.

Mais à ce stade-ci, les Européens croient qu'il est plus sage, même si cela prend du temps, de négocier la paix plutôt que de l'imposer. Récemment, lors des négociations de Genève, les parties en sont presque venues à une entente. On prévoyait "contourner" la Bosnie indépendante sur le modèle de la Suisse. Pour la première fois dans ce conflit, Slobodan Milosevic s'est montré en faveur d'une intervention en Bosnie, même si la Russie est un allié traditionnel de la Serbie. Ce qui inquiète, c'est le risque de déstabilisation du régime que cela provoquerait. Les généraux de l'Armée rouge ainsi que de nombreux députés russes sont catégoriquement opposés à toutes interventions militaires en Yougoslavie. Les tensions sont déjà assez grandes en Russie, et un coup d'État n'est pas à écarter.

Intervenir sur la pointe des pieds

L'ombre au tableau, car il y en a une, est du côté de la Russie. Boris Eltsine se dit ouvertement en faveur d'une intervention en Bosnie, même si la Russie est un allié traditionnel de la Serbie. Ce qui inquiète, c'est le risque de déstabilisation du régime que cela provoquerait. Les généraux de l'Armée rouge ainsi que de nombreux députés russes sont catégoriquement opposés à toutes interventions militaires en Yougoslavie. Les tensions sont déjà assez grandes en Russie, et un coup d'État n'est pas à écarter.

Pour contourner le problème russe, il semble qu'il faille intervenir, mais pas directement contre les Serbes. À première vue, une intervention armée doit être dirigée contre

"l'agresseur", c'est-à-dire les Serbes, selon la vision occidentale. Mais dans le cas de la Yougoslavie, contrairement à la Guerre du Golfe, il n'est pas aussi simple d'identifier l'agresseur. Comme il ne vient pas de l'extérieur du pays, il ne pourra pas simplement être repoussé. Musulmans et Croates sont perçus comme des "victimes", parce qu'ils sont en position défensive. L'avantage est aux Serbes, mais il ne faut pas dire trop facilement que le Serbe est l'agresseur premier. Disons tout au plus que les Serbes forment le groupe le plus fanatique et le plus dangereux, parce qu'actuellement le plus puissant.

Le loup dans toute cette histoire, ce n'est pas le méchant Serbe. Non, le loup qui effraie les Européens, c'est le nationalisme. Pas le nationalisme d'émancipation nationale, mais plutôt celui qui se rapproche du nazisme. Le nationalisme de la race.

Y a-t-il un autre loup? Pas exactement, plutôt un provocateur qui crie au loup, et qui l'attire avec ses cris. Il s'agit des journalistes, qui trop souvent préfèrent le sensationnel au raisonnable. Rien de bon pour régler le conflit.

LOVE IS IN THE AIR... or is it LUST?

by Passionate Pelle

Alas, spring is here, the time for new beginnings, the time of love. It'd be more appropriate if it was called the mating season. Everyone gets so crazy around this time of year. Ogling of leggy, buxom creatures and lanky, muscular bodies becomes a common pastime. The winter blues are over so get in on the action. Yes folks, hear those raging hormones cry for compassion, tender, warmth— whoops, sorry — nasty, dirty, hot and sweaty sex.

Certainly, you are familiar with the ritual - boy sees girl, boy seduces girl, boy wins girl, (and vice-versa of course—women are definitely able creatures of paralyzing their unwilling victims). What is one to do in such a time of rampant emotion? Nothing of course, because even the disbeliever will be caught in this fervour of passion—the lust-bug is back. My advice is this: simply lay back, relax, and let lust fever wash over you like the plague, feel it invade your body, depositing its insipid parasites let it flow through you like the flu. You are now easier once you're there. From that point on, pro. That woman (or man—hey, preference is so find your luscious beer gut hard to resist. Speak—comes the trend during these fun-filled days, more bodacious babes. Ahh, what a life. There's in, you can't get out. - beer and babes, beer and comes nothing but, and there's no time for school—extinct. You will be lost in what is plainly called The Screw-up Zone. However, there is no cause for worry because this season will pass, just like any other. The cold, harsh, season of fall will return, (summer will have just been a haze), and you're babe will have left you before the leaves have fallen to the ground.

Life is a cruel thing; it is up to you to take advantage of it.

within your passive bloodstream, in the horny zone. Things get you'll be spewing lines like a ambiguous these days), will ing of beer guts, dieting be—consisting of more beer and only one setback; once you're whatever, hell, your life be—work, the word becomes virtually

PRESENTS

New Stuff

Russian Prince Vodka wants you to listen to and read about the hottest new music available today. Just $29.50 gets you six different "New Stuff" CD's featuring a minimum of 16 brand new tracks each, and twelve issues of SoundCan magazine, the new pulse of Canadian music. Here's just a few of the bands featured on the current "New Stuff" CD presented by Russian Prince Vodka.

Lost Dakotas

From street corners to subway station, there's no telling where this lively quartet will draw a crowd. With their infectious blend of twangified rock set against a backdrop of cut-out cacti, the Lost Dakotas have built a loyal following across the country, offering fans the 1990 cassette Love To Play and their most recent 15-song CD and cassette, Last Train To Kipling. Yeehah!

One

One is actually eight guys who make some of the grooviest, sweatiest, horn-powered dance music this side of the West Indies (where they actually recorded and mixed their latest release). With a string of awards and a list of venues as long as a trombone, this young Toronto-based band has been stirring up crowds across the continent for the past three years with their reggae-rocking sound. Check it out on One's 4-song EP and 10-song cassette.

Tea Party

There's something psychedelic in the powerful concoction this Windsor trio serves up on their self-titled debut CD. Drawing on the timeless influences of Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin, the Tea Party mixes in plenty of other sounds, like folk and Eastern flavours that make their music an intriguing, exotic rock brew.

As an added bonus, if you subscribe now through this special campus offer you will be eligible to win:

- One of three Hitachi CX-W300 personal stereos featuring CD player and double cassette deck for high speed dubbing.
- One of fifty 5 CD "Hot Packs" featuring new albums by artists featured on the "New Stuff" CD presented by Russian Prince Vodka.

Complete information and mail to: Campus Subscription Offer, 219 Dufferin Street, Suite 100, Toronto, Ontario M6K 3J1.

RUSSIAN PRINCE IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK

Colonial Day

March 9 stereotypes... Colonial Day. All British subjects please pay homage to the Empire and our glorious Queen Elizabeth II!

All hail our gracious Queen.

Colonials raise your new world wine.

The British Empire remains a symbolic and often sardonic reminder of past decades of conquest. Pompous ceremonies and parades depict a symbolic figure-head and her fixation with an outdated monarchy.

The fact that Colonial Day exists is a pretentious reminder of supposed colonial subordination to Britain. Existing colonies in Africa, Asia, North and South America sanctimoniously vow allegiance to the crown. Why are such occurrences necessary?

The empire is deflated. Britain, in the past, parasitically gained economic strength from her colonies. The crown symbolically denotes power of approval or disapproval over laws colonies transcribe in their governments.

Colonial day reinforces, for patriotic monarchists, a pride and sense of origin. Union Jacks cloud the yards of many, casting the shadow of an empire no longer capable of enforcing colonial policies.

There is pride in the acknowledgment that Britain defeated the French on the Plains of Abraham to claim Canada. There should be more pride for Canada.

So, let's all join together and celebrate our colonialism. Rule Britannia and our British heritage. Long live the Queen...long live the Empire...long live Canada—oops, (sorry GLEN!)

FALLING DOWN

Starring: Michael Douglas, Robert Duvall, Barbara Hershey

by Theo Rallis
Staff Writer

In the beginning, we see Douglas who plays an unemployed defense industry employee referred to only by his personalized licence plate D-Fens, trapped in his car on a jammed L.A. freeway. He's hot, sweating, frustrated and ready to snap at any second. Within minutes, this mildly attired straight arrow detonates, abandons his car and heads for home on foot.

Douglas has always been enticed by washed-up, complex, semi-psychotic characters, and D-Fens is no exception. He's the epitome of a man that's had enough of the city, his job, people, and life itself. During the first half of the movie, we can relate with the character and the situations he finds himself in; we have all been there at one time. Yet, the movie goes from a dark allegory to a comic parody. Joel Schumacher (director), is strictly out of his league, and should stay with his sleek teen fare triumphants Flatliners and Lostboys.

Robert Duvall plays a coward cop on his last day on the job before retirement that cracks this entire case. Duvall's character is unrealistic for this type of a movie. He portrays the image of the boy next door, doesn't lie, cheat, steal, or swear. Once his character takes a major part in the film, it becomes Andy Taylor meets Hannibal Lecter, a complete spoof.

The downfall of this movie is the inability to sympathize with Douglas' character. He charms us and disturbs us in the same minute. In a particular scene, Douglas asks, "You mean I'm the bad guy? Correct me if I'm wrong, but when was the last time you saw Mr. Rogers walking around L.A. with a duffle bag full of automated weapons and a rocket launcher?"

But, all is not lost, for the ending takes a nice, dark twist. Then again, I'm not sure if I liked the ending, or if I was glad it was just the END.

GROUNDHOG DAY

Starring: Bill Murray, Andie Macdowell

by Theo Rallis
Staff Writer

This movie is about a cynical, T.V. weatherman Phil Connors (Bill Murray), who is sent to Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, to do an annual puff piece on Groundhog Day and what Punxsutawney Pete (the Groundhog), will forecast. Once there though, he becomes trapped in a timewarp, and has to relive the same miserable day over and over again. As soon as 6a.m. rolls around, Sonny and Cher's "I Got You Babe" comes blaring through on the clock radio, the same fat sloth is on the staircase, the same hostess is offering him coffee, and the same annoying, gawky joker who he knew in school keeps trying to sell him insurance.

The movie becomes quite humorous once Phil realizes that he's trapped in a time warp, and even if he insults anyone, humiliates himself, or even ceases to exist, he'll be back there the very next day, which in reality is the same day, and alter it any way he so desires. Phil, taking full advantage of his situation, decides to kill himself by electrocution using his body as a test dummy in front of a truck and plummeting to his death after driving a pick-up over a cliff with Punxsutawney Pete at the wheel.

Phil realizes that he can approach a woman, discover everything about her, what she likes, her past, her present, and use that information to lure her into bed "the next day," and does this quite often. The movie though gets lame once Phil turns soft, squishy, and romantic when trying to pursue his T.V. producer (Andie Macdowell).

What the film lacks is the continual, lapidary comic structure that could have made some of the whimsical humour fuse into sheer, comic magic.

Groundhog Day is worth watching just to see Murray's moist, el fake-o sincerity and sarcasm. If Murray would have stayed as his cynical, out for himself T.V. weatherman, instead of turning into the Romantic Sap that he did, Groundhog Day would truly have been one of the comic classics.

Took my lonesome self into the church,
felt so small and insecure, saw nine ducks, five after four.

In The Dark

Well, since last week I'm feeling a little better, but only a little. I'm at the bitterness stage of my grief. I miss that woman terribly. The fact that I see her everywhere doesn't help either.

I am however coping by channeling my bitterness; and the way I'm doing this is by making everybody else in the world bitter too. I've adopted a number of methods to do this - I'll share some with you.

- 1 - I slam doors behind me, in people's faces preferably.
- 2 - I wear a big sombrero to a movie & sit in front of somebody short.
- 3 - I ride the shoulder through traffic jams then cut in.
- 4 - I pee in swimming pools.
- 5 - I wear golf shoes on polished wooden floors.
- 6 - I put salt in sugar containers.
- 7 - I stop rewinding videos be-

- fore bringing them back.
- 8 - I walk slowly in crowded places and not let anybody past.
- 9 - I drive slow in the passing lane.
- 10 - I tell kids the truth about Santa Claus.
- 11 - I take my neighbour's newspaper.
- 12 - I fart in cramped public places.
- 13 - I shave every week and let my nose hair grow.

- 14 - I no longer flush.
- 15 - I tailgate elderly drivers.
- 16 - When people ask me for directions I leave out a couple of key turns.
- 17 - Try to be the first person off the bus no matter where I am sitting.
- 18 - Before I get off the elevator, I push all the buttons.
- 19 - Wisecrack during tense situations.
- 20 - Whenever I can, I step on the back of the shoes of the person walking in front of me.

Yes, since the woman left me I greet each day with a growl, put a chip on my shoulder, walk tall, carry a big stick and use it. And most importantly to me, to spread my miserable mood around I do unto others as I would never have them do unto me.

If I Had Known At Eighteen

That the weakness in ourselves we recognize as a weakness can be made either endearing or compensated for, but the weakness in ourselves that we regard as a strength is what will ultimately betray and defeat us.

That we do not grow up uniformly, but in spots and streaks; so that we may be mentally mature but still emotionally underdeveloped, or have a good practical grasp but still lack spiritual depth; and we must not make the mistake of confusing our categories of grown-upness.

That candor in order to cure is very different from candor in order to hurt, and putting someone right is quite different from putting someone down.

That the way to persuade someone is not to beckon him to come and look at things from where you stand, but to move over top where he stands and then try to walk hand in hand to where you would like both of you to stand.

That the best (and, ultimately, the only) way to make a "good impression" is by becoming who you are, not by trying to conform to anyone else's standard of what ought to be.

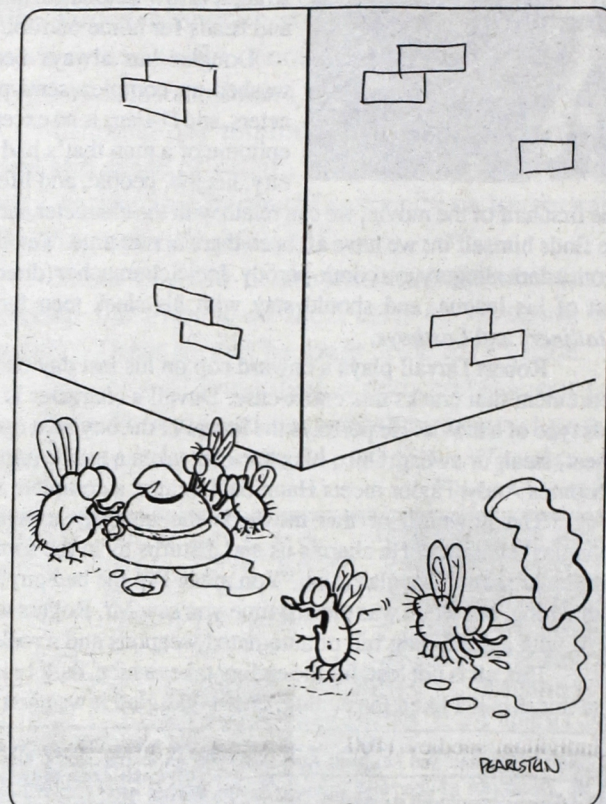

That wanting to be liked and admired by persons whose opinions or characters you do not really respect is the most common, and pernicious, form of emotional prostitution in the world.

That if you do not find pleasure in solitude, you will not develop enough resources within yourself to find genuine pleasure in company; and, conversely, if you do not find pleasure in company, your solitude will be barren and involuted rather than creative and expansive.

That while it is true in the world of arithmetic that two and two makes four, it is not true in the world of real things that two apples and two lamps make four of anything; and thus, we cannot add up disparities and expect to come out with a neat sum, but must accept the fact that the real world is composed of "irrational number."

That, in the deepest Platonic sense of the word, you do not truly "know" something until you act upon it; and that "know thyself" is a meaningless injunction unless and until such knowledge compels you to put into action, in immediate and practical terms.

That the world of experience is divided, roughly, into those things which are matters of taste and those which are matters of judgement; and the rigid relativist who turns matters of judgement into mere matters of taste is as foolish as the rigid absolutist who turns matters of taste into matters of judgement.

Coming Out Of The Dark

It seemed like I had been sitting there for hours. The darkness was complete; it enveloped in the purity of an artificial night sky. From above glowed a glorious light, it was as red as blood and as comforting as a harvest moon. The smell was sweet, and barely acidic. Water ran like a waterfall nearby.

In just one moment, it all became wonderfully clear. I held, in my hand, the power to change the visualities of the greater society. For just a moment I believed that I would have an effect on how and what people saw. Although I was in the darkness, I was the master of perception. The past, the present and the future all pivoted on how I allowed things to develop.

The, there was a bright light. For a moment, I was blinded. As I regained my balance and control over my senses I opened the door that had separated me from the outside world. It seemed as though a thousand eyes turned to look at me with synchronized anxiety. I prepared to speak.

"Hey," I said, "has anyone seen the photo editor? I have his Tai-Chi pictures done."

Superstar Sweetnam Cleans up at CIAUs

By Tim Kelly
Staff Writer

The University of Toronto may have captured the team title but last weekend's national university swim championships belonged to Laurentian University's Nancy Sweetnam.

The first-year sports administration student from Lindsay, Ont., roared to victory in three events setting world best times for 1993 in each. In her specialty, the 200-metre individual medley (50 metres each of butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle) Sweetnam came within three-tenths of a second of the world record with a time of 2:10.90. The world record of 2:10.60 was set way back in 1992 by Petra Schneider of Germany.

In the process, Sweetnam, who is coached by Dr. Jeno Tihanyi the man who pushed Alex Baumann to double-gold in L.A. in the 1984 Olympics, defeated two of her Canadian Olympic team rivals. She established herself as Canada's top female swimmer in beating Marianne Limpert (University of Toronto) and Guylaine Cloutier (University of Montreal).

Sweetnam notched a CIAU and Canadian record in the 200m breaststroke clocking 2:25.69, an incredible three seconds better than Cloutier, who finished second. Cloutier's 1992 CIAU record was 2:29.09 while Allison Higson's Canadian record in the event, set in 1988, was 2:26.48.

She continued her terrific weekend with an amazing win in the 400-metre individual medley (100 metres each of butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle) beating Iona Allen of the University of New Brunswick by a whopping 12 seconds. Sweetnam's time of 4:38.61 smashed Patricia Noall's 1991 CIAU record of 4:47.10. It was no surprise that Sweetnam was named Swimmer of the Meet while Tihanyi got the nod as CIAU coach of the year.

It's not as though Sweetnam came out of nowhere this weekend, however.

The 19-year-old has been a force nationally for the past five years. She just missed qualifying for the 1988 Olympics and continued swimming out of Lindsay, where she was coached by her mother Marian until last September. She had a good Olympics in Barcelona finishing seventh in the final of the 200 I.M., ironically, just behind sixth place Limpert, whom she defeated in the same event on Saturday.

In the 200m breaststroke at Barcelona, Sweetnam placed 13th overall, again, behind fourth place finisher Cloutier.

Clearly, Sweetnam is improving and she gives a lot of the credit for that to the talented Tihanyi.

"It's my first year under Doc (Tihanyi's nickname) and I've switched to a new program from the one I've been using for the last six or seven years," says Sweetnam.

"I had a lot of competition on the weekend from Marianne (Limpert) and Guylaine (Cloutier). They helped push me to record times."

Sweetnam says this has been a unique year for her. She's away from home for the first time and has to concentrate on school as well as swimming. It certainly hasn't hurt her performances in the pool which continue to get better and better.

The Toronto Star

"At the level I'm at now, it's quite a feat to chop time off your events as I've been able to do lately. I haven't even shaved and tapered (swimmer's lingo for shaving off all body hair and getting finely tuned-up for major events) and still the times are coming down. I'm very happy, naturally," says Sweetnam.

She will now be moving to the long-course season where swimmers race Olympic distance 50-metre lengths. Her times should improve there as well as she'll have half as many turns to make as in the 25-metre length short-course races.

A swimmer's life is gruelling as most sports fans know. Sweetnam gets up at 5:30 each morning for a 90-minute swim in the Laurentian University pool, follows that up with a day full of classes (she carried seven courses in the first term but is down from that number this term), then lifts weights from 4-4:45 p.m. each day and swims again from 5-6:30 p.m. The twice-a-day, in-the-pool training is nothing new for Sweetnam but combining it with residence life in the Single Student's Residence and with her SPAD studies is.

"I don't need a lot of sleep, thankfully," she laughs. She says she's down to about four hours a night, but that's fine. "I've never been somebody who has had to get eight hours a night or else."

Sweetnam has a full schedule of meets coming up after the school year ends in April. For now, she'll concentrate on her school work and focus on her exams in April.

But a swimmer's training never ends and she'll continue to work in the pool to keep in top shape.

Sudbury suits Sweetnam just fine.

"I'm from a small town and I enjoy living in smaller places. That's one of the reasons I came to Laurentian University. Certainly, the chance to train with Doc was a major factor as well. The pool is a very good facility. In Lindsay we trained in a 25-metre pool and had to go to U of T if we wanted to swim in a 50-metre pool. Here, you just have to get out of bed and walk over to the pool in the morning. It's great," says Sweetnam.

Motivation over the next three years won't be hard to maintain says Sweetnam. She clearly has her focus on the Atlanta Olympics in 1996.

"I'll be attending Laurentian and training under Doc right through to the Olympics and hope I can do well," she says.

She might even be able to duplicate Baumann's 200-400 I.M.

double-gold Olympic performance though predictions are foolish at this point.

In Monday's Toronto Star, Tihanyi avoided comparisons between his two prize pupils.

"I don't like to make predictions; I never did that with Alex and I won't do it with Nancy," Tihanyi told Mark Zwolinski of The Toronto Star. "But I think she has showed she has the makings of a top international swimmer."

Tihanyi also said that Sweetnam, "Swam an intelligent race in the 200 I.M. That's what made Alex so great."

Sweetnam's mother attended the weekend events in Toronto and fondly looked on as her former pupil beat all comers. Coach Marian Sweetnam kept her role confined to the pool. Motherhood and swimming did not mix in the Sweetnam home.

"We never talked about swimming around the house. We left that for the pool," said Nancy.

"My dad stayed out of swimming entirely, so it didn't become the only focus in my life, which was good. I enjoyed myself too."

Sweetnam should have fun in her long countdown to Atlanta. If she continues to progress and improve, she should be taking a stand on an Olympic podium just over three years from now.

Intramural Men's Basketball Closes Another Successful Season

The 1992/93 Intramural Men's Basketball season officially came to an end on February 23 with the running of both the "A" and "B" division finals. Previously, the semi-finals occurred during the week prior Spring break.

In the "A" division, Northern Heat defeated the league-leading Italian Flyers, in a stunning upset. Although the Flyers did not play a poor game overall, as does usually happen in an upset, the play and shooting of the Northern Heat was truly remarkable and unmatched on this night. The game ended with the Heat winning 60-55.

The second semi-final between T.C.O.B. (Taking Care of Business) and the Huntington Hawks was also a close game throughout, with T.C.O.B. pulling away at the end to take the game 54-35.

The "B" division also held some heated action. In the first semi league-leaders, Rico's Rebounders had their hands full with the 7th floor Hounds.

The lead changed hands on numerous occasions before the Rebounders finally put away the stubborn Hounds 39-35. In the second semi, favoured Twisted Steel & Sex Appeal had control of the game throughout as they advanced to the final with a 58-35 victory over the T-Birds.

The finals in both divisions took place immediately after spring break. With the full gym, three-point shooting, and more time available for play, the stage was set for a couple of high scoring games. The "B" division final pitted Rico's Rebounders against Twisted Steel & Sex Appeal. The Rebounders had defeated the Twisted ones earlier on in the regular season and they were ready to invoke some twisted revenge. The game was a close one throughout, with Rico's Rebounders keeping a tender lead for the duration. In the end, time ran out for Twisted Steel as Rico's took the game 62-53. The "A" final was truly an exciting game pitting the young Northern Heat against the veteran, ex-varsity T.C.O.B. (Taking Care Of Business) tea. After a slow start for both teams, T.C.O.B. jumped out to a quick lead. The Heat responded however, and caught up to their opponents. This was the scenario during the entire game, where T.C.O.B. would take a big lead and the Heat would then bounce back to close the gap, and even take the lead on a couple of occasions. In the end however, time ran out on the Heat as T.C.O.B.'s high-powered offense geared them to 115-93 victory. The game was marked by high scoring, ushered by plenty of three point baskets, consistent free throw shooting, and great passing skills, on both sides. Congratulations to both winning teams.

It was an overall successful year for men's intramural basketball. There was a little rough play and great determination and competition displayed by those who participated. Much thanks go out to Peter Campbell

SWIMMING VEES COME OUT FIGHTING AT CIAU'S

Despite various illnesses affecting the Laurentian swim team, they made an impact at the CIAU's this past weekend in Toronto.

Nancy Sweetnam had a phenomenal meet as she destroyed the CIAU record in the 400m Individual Medley with a gold medal time of 4:38.61: giving her a new Canadian record as well as ranking her 1st in the world at the 400m IM. Nancy also came very close to upsetting the Canadian champion, Guylaine Cloutier, in the 100m breaststroke finishing second by one-tenth of a second with a time of 1:09.36 - ranking her 6th in the world.

Dave Chisolm lead the way for the men winning the 400 IM consolation final. The men's 4x100 relay team finished 3rd in the consolation final.

In addition, Nancy Sweetnam won a spot on the Canadian National FISU team. Congratulations to the Laurentian Swim team for a strong finish to a great season.
